Mary Mallek Haines's poetry tells us how we, too, might find the cradle of our identity, the planks that make us. By recreating years of pilgrimage, home always at its center, the poet causes a resonance of journey in the reader. And as we count our days through hers, our travels through her own, our acquaintances and loved ones through the people she has met, we click the beads of our own abacuses, surprised perhaps that there is no subtracting after all. For every bead we slide, a memory endlessly vibrating.
